PRESIDENT BILL BY WILLIAM L. BROWN

PRESIDENT BILL

In the recommendation of my campaign staff, I took a world tour to distract the American electorate from my ambitious, but austere, domestic policies. Aside from politicking, I wanted to bolster my New World Entropy foreign policy aims: human rights, global decentralization, regional autonomy, environmentalism, and randomocracy. I began my tour in Eastern Europe, the scene of many promising entropic developments. But, before I continued my travels, my campaign staff urged me to make a side trip to Hawaii for the anniversary of Pearl Harbor Day. ★

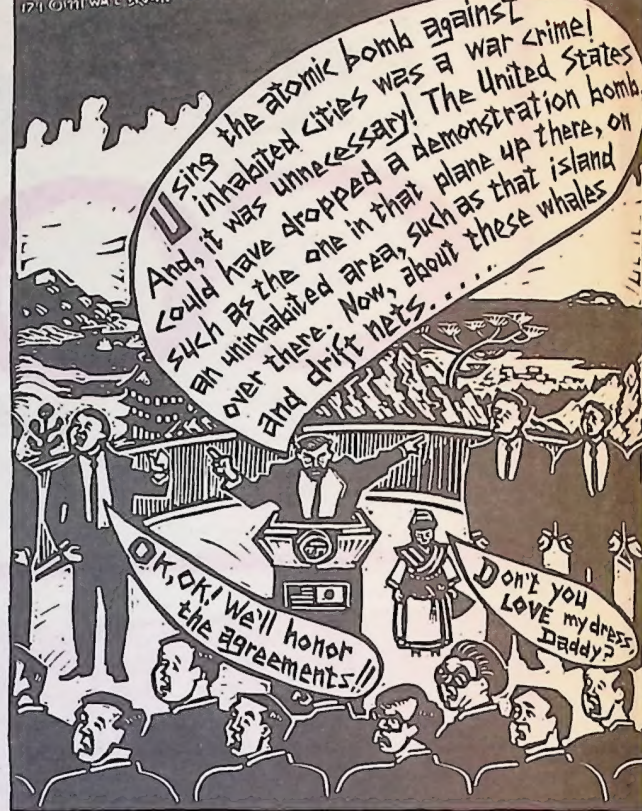

★ ABOLISH ELECTIONS VOTE FOR PRESIDENT BILL! ★

PRESIDENT BILL

The next stop on my ★ international tour was Japan. My chief concern with the Japanese was environmental. They were persisting not only in hunting whales, but in killing dolphins and other marine life with 30-mile-long drift nets. They ignored worldwide condemnation of these brutal practices, which nearly every nation agreed to refrain from. I hoped to get Japan to honor those agreements. I tempered my criticisms with a long-overdue apology from the United States for the atomic bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki in 1945. ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

★ ABOLISH ELECTIONS VOTE FOR PRESIDENT BILL! ★

"President Bill" appears in President Bill, a Graphic Epic, a book published by Andrews and McMeel. This book is now available at Broadside Bookshop, Faces, Food For Thought Books, and the Beyond Words bookstore. Get caught up on the story. It's worth it.

by Mike Chrisman

There was a letter to the editor of the Greenfield, Mass. Recorder not too long ago, from a guy who said his mother-in-law shot herself in the finger with a miniature pistol which she just happened to be wearing as an earring.

As fate would have it, this is exactly the kind of thing Our Founders had in mind when they voted for the Second Amendment, which reads, "Congress shall make no law restricting the right of people to shoot themselves with earrings." It's a little-known fact that several constitutional representatives wanted to extend the selection of exploding personal accessories to include wool mittens and those women's stoles that look like flat dead weasels.

Fortunately, cooler heads prevailed, which is why today we see pink Cadillacs driven by Mary Kay Cosmetic salespeople with bumperstickers that say, "If earrings are outlawed, only outlaws will wear earrings."

The trouble with this scenario, and I'm speaking now earnestly and directly to Robert Bly, is that men don't yet seem to have weapons in their cars. Why is this? Wouldn't you imagine, with all the terrific maiming devices men have invented through the years — I'm thinking here of implements like the car door and the do-it-yourself tub installation — that by now some men would have said, "Hey, I love my shoulder holster, but I'd feel a whole lot nattier packing the Uzi on the old lobe, ya know?" I'm pretty sure if Robert Bly promoted this fashion statement, a bunch more men would go crashing into the woods to get naked and drum and sweat their heads off, because if anybody laughed at them when they broke down sobbing, they could waste them. "Sorry, Phil; guess my insecurities are showing." Blam!

But even aside from the crucial issue of which sex has the most firepower bumping against their neck, there's this highly valuable economic note: somebody's missing a whale of an opportunity in jewelry retail. I, for one, can think of no better way to pep up a post-holiday clearance sale than to slap a big sign across your store window: "Gold Hoops, Hypo-Allergenic Posts, Tactical Nuclear Clip-ons — Reduced 30%!" That would bring in the really smart shoppers, especially in certain rural areas where most people have the same last name as the sheriff.

There's just one thing I worry about in this whole affair, and if you'll look closely, you'll see it wasn't mentioned in that letter (above) to the Greenfield (Home Of Teensy Revolvers) Recorder. And I only point it out because I'm a really excellent parent, probably much better than most people reading this (not to mention any names). Because I know that no matter what, whenever I give my daughter earrings, I always tell her — and I mean always — I tell her never wear them if they're loaded! Then she sighs, and says, "Oh, Dad," which means she loves me even though I have a brain the size of a flatworm. Then she hangs her guns in her ears and goes outside to bag a muskrat.

JOE BOB BRIGGS

You ever get out your high school yearbook and find pictures of zombies in there?

Or maybe you'd call 'em ghost people. They're people you remember. You know exactly who they are. Some of 'em you spent 12 years of your life with. You saw 'em almost every day. But when you see the face now, you feel nothing. Zip. You hear no voice. You have no memories of anything you said to them or they said to you. You could get more excited when you see the face on a Betty Crocker package. And if you hadn't picked up the yearbook, you would never ever have remembered that this person was alive.

It's like they exist but they don't exist. They drift into the room, drift out of the room, never make an impression, hang around, have a couple beers, and now they're out there somewhere, bearing children or something — only their gynecologist doesn't notice them either. And the men are probly going to "Iron John" Wildman Weekends to try to figure out where they lost their lives.

In the thirties people called 'em "wall flowers." But that's way too flashy a description for these people. "Linoleum people" is what they are.

Or, even scarier, maybe you are the Linoleum Person, and they're blissed out on some Zen trip. They understand the universe. You're the guy with the massive American Express bill.

Anyhow, I've got one simple way to understand what happened to the American economy the last two, three years:

Everybody between the ages of 30 and 50 should get out their high school yearbooks. Thirty-to-fifty is Prime Time, right? These are the people that should be running the country, building stuff, handing out jobs, right? These are the people that are supposed to kick hiney against the Japanese whiz kids and the German Doitchie Boys. Right?

Look in those yearbooks: Zombie People.

Thirty-eight-year-old guys that got divorced and moved back home to live with Mom. Guys that did so many drugs between 1967 and 1979 that they have little lines around their eye sock-ets, from buggin' 'em out so often. "Performance artists" who have never made more than 20 bucks a night for their entire 15-year careers. Fat guys who watch too much "Star Trek." All the people on "Love Connection." Guys that sell insurance for ten years, then freak out when they realize they're getting old and they haven't ever been to

New Zealand.

You know the kind of mindset I'm talking about here?

They looked like zombies in 1970, they remained zombies in 1980, and they're gonna be zombies in the next Century, too. On the outside, they may be cruising down Santa Monica Boulevard in a Jag. On the inside, they're thinking, "Maybe I could grow a pony-tail and get a guest shot on '21 Jump Street.' That's still on, isn't it? I gotta watch more TV. I gotta go on a diet and watch more TV."

There hasn't been a generation like this since the time when the emperor of Rome was a transvestite. (Emperor Elagabalus, for the scholars out there.)

It's not like anybody we know is out there designing new tool-and-die plants that the Germans have to spy on. It's not like Lisa Salvatini, from your 11th-grade biology class, suddenly devoted herself to science and developed a new strain of hybrid wheat that will feed the Russians for the next ten years.

What the heck have we got to sell anybody?

But what's amazing is that we're like a pit bulldog who's had all his legs cut off, but he still believes he can fight. We still think we can lay around the house all day, watching TV, and then tomorrow we can put on a suit and go downtown and convince somebody, with our charm, to hire us.

That's why America now has only one product that the whole world wants: movies.

We're great bullstuff artists.

But you can only listen to the charming bullstuff for so long before you have to tell a guy, "That was great, but now we have to get back to work."

You know what I'm talking about?

Everybody says "the economy" is the problem.

The economy be Us.

Floods

Flashfloods and mudslides killed scores of South Americans during several days of severe weather that struck a wide area from Rio de Janeiro to northwestern Argentina. At least 30 people were killed after a river of mud and water devastated several Argentine towns north of Cordoba. In Brazil, a six-hour tempest set off flash flooding around Rio. A family of seven was buried alive by a mudslide as they slept in the nearby mountain resort of Teresopolis.

Torrential rains also hit hard in the Caribbean. Widespread flooding in Puerto Rico claimed at least 20 lives and forced more than 800 people from their homes.

Massive flooding in parts of Texas receded, but polluted floodwaters flowing into Galveston Bay put more than 80 percent of the state's most productive oyster reefs off limits to fishermen. Health officials don't know how long it will be before it will be safe to start harvesting the shellfish again.

Tropical Storms

Tropical cyclone Axel lashed several of the Caroline Islands with winds of up to 110 miles per hour and hazardous ocean waves. The storm was still gaining strength late in the week.

The New Hebrides were pounded by high surf and gale-force winds from tropical cyclone Betsy as it skirted the South Pacific island group. A weak and disorganized tropical cyclone Mark formed over the Gulf of Carpentaria in northern Australia.

In the Indian Ocean, tropical cyclone Bryna lost force as it passed between Madagascar and the French island territory of Reunion.

Lightning Deaths

Seven people were killed and 36 others seriously injured by lightning from severe thunderstorms that struck northwestern and central Tanzania.

Harmattan

A sharp chill from a seasonal desert wind known as the Harmattan killed at least 17 people in Nigeria, while low visibility from the accompanying dust storms brought the northern half of the country to a standstill. All-time record low temperatures to near freezing were reported during the four-day cold wave in the city of Kaduna. The subtropical warmth which normally prevails over the West African nation is occasionally displaced by the Harmattan winds which bring with them the wintry chill of the Sahara Desert during January and February.

Earthquakes

In an very quiet week for worldwide seismic activity, earth movements were detected in Pakistan, New Jersey, along the Peru-Bolivia border, and in Canada's Northwest Territories.

Fire Ant Fire

Officials in the Texas town of Bartlett have determined that a fire which killed an elderly woman was caused by an army of fire ants that crawled into an electrical panel and triggered a short circuit. Sixty-eight-year-old Minnie Gibson died of smoke inhalation during the fire that started in her mobile home. Fire ants, accidentally brought into Texas from South America during the 1940s, have an attraction to electrical fields and often cause short circuits in everything from air conditioners to airport runway lights. Mrs. Gibson had struggled to control a growing number of fire ants in her yard with pesticides just prior to her death.

Greek Smog

Air pollution soared to such high levels in Athens that the government banned private cars from the city center.

Icebound

Stuck in the ice off the coast of Antarctica, a supply ship with 62 bored people aboard has become the world's largest penguin-watching platform. The German-owned Icebird, leased by the Australian Antarctic division, was returning from Casey Base when it became trapped in an unseasonably thick ice pack. In the meantime, Emperor penguins have flocked to the stranded ship to check out the unusual visitors. "I really don't know who is watching who," joked voyage leader Brian Taylor. "The penguins have surrounded the ship, but at least we aren't alone out here." If the vessel doesn't break free soon, the Australian ship Aurora Australis may be dispatched on a rescue mission.

In Derbyshire, England, remains a village called Flash. Gaudily-dressed gypsies once favored the place. And gave us another adjective for certain clothing — "flashy."

In the baseball lingo of Canada, a "beauty shot" is a base hit.

This, says one medical specialist, is how you can tell whether you're overweight: "Stand stark naked in front of a full-length mirror. Turn around slowly. If you look too fat, you're too fat."

Q. What's a "scopophilia?"

A. A voyeur. One who likes to watch live erotic action.

That old legal term "seven seas" has confused our common language of geography, has it not? Professors say, There are the four oceans, only four, in descending order of size: Pacific, Atlantic, Indian, and Arctic. You knew that?

The day Mary Todd married Abraham Lincoln, she knew how to speak fluent French, but had no idea at all about how to fix lunch. That, according to the historical footnotes.

In proportion to body size, if your tongue were as long as an anteater's, you could zap it out there about three feet. Pretty picture, what?

It is a natural matter for the Golden Frogs of Panama to remain in the mating embrace for several months until the female lays her eggs.

Q. What kind of gas makes the bubbles in Swiss cheese?

A. Carbon dioxide.

It was the old Chicago Record-Herald that editorialized in 1903 that our little toes were useless, so no doubt would disappear within the next 100 years from then. Lot of futurists know what. But few ever come close to when.

Is there a "No. 1 key" to long-term marital satisfaction? Some marriage counselors now say so. These particular experts claim it's "the male partner's ability to respond sensitively and give emotional support." Our Love and War man is studying it.

Q. What one word is common to the largest number of different languages?

A. "Zero." Or so contend some scholars. Our own Language man, however, suspects certain latterday words such as "pizza" and "hamburger" have overtaken "zero" for that distinction. Research goes on.

Boy, have I had some bad luck with girls.

The night before my very first date, the girl called me to say her cat got sick and had to be put to sleep the next day. So, she cancelled because she wanted to spend time with it on its last day. She wanted to pet it and hold it. I told her I'd come over and we could both pet her kitty.

She said no. Some people simply won't let you into their lives, or their kitty's. Boy, does that hurt.

Is it inborn in humans to lie about whether we were asleep when the phone rang and woke us up? No matter what time of day or night the call comes in, we are ashamed to admit we were napping. If people were computers, "No" would be the default to the question "Did I wake you?" Why is it embarrassing to admit we sometimes take a lie-down?

What gets us in trouble is our hearing, the faculty that works best while we slumber. Awakened out of a deep sleep by the sound of the phone ringing, the human being can't see or feel. Taste is impossible due to a mouthful of dry phlegm taffy. The nose registers a pungent mixture of morning-breath and essence of sheet. Attempts at speech result in sounds ordinarily heard only through a drinking glass placed against an apartment wall.

The ears, though, work so well the person on the other end can clearly be understood. "Hi. Did I wake you?" "Uh, no. Oz thinkin a sumptin when da fone ran." "Good, 'cause I wanted your opinion on a life-or-death matter." "Oh. Sure. Shoot." Short sentences are best because it is possible to catch some significant sleep while the other person is talking. Never having come fully awake, the trip to REM-land is short.

The best way to keep from being caught in the lie is to get the caller to impart some information such as an address or phone number. This gives you the chance to say, "wade da minute. Lemme gedda pencil." Instead of going anywhere, put your head down and catch 27 seconds of heavenly SLEEP, then bring the phone back to your ear and say, "OK, whatsa numba?" As the number is given, snooze for 7 more seconds. Convince the caller you are listening by hypnotically repeating the numbers while still in a deep sleep. If the message is important, try tracing the number in the air with your finger. You won't remember it, but at least your intentions are good.

The greatest danger lies in allowing the conversation to carry on too long. The best sleepwalkers use whatever mental capacity is available to them to opt out of the dialogue ASAP. Because you can't remember any part of the exchange except your lie, it's best to use an outside stimulus to get off the phone. Imply that you were active before the call and were interrupted doing something important. "Let me call you back after I finish polyurethaning the floors." Or "my jogging partner is at the door and I can't keep her waiting." Be careful of alliteration. "I'm baking banana-bran biscuits for breakfast" is a great closer, but the odds of getting it out without blowing the entire act are astronomical. Remember the mouth taffy.

In my worst nightmare, two people call at the same moment, forcing me to deal with call-waiting and dual conversations. Of course, I could look on that as a challenge. Let me get a pencil.
